

Evaluation Chah nime effects on Socio – economic dimension around Villages

Abstract

Today, Rural Development is one of the important subjects in social and economical development of countries, especially in Third World countries is considered. In the past few decades, one of the issues considered by many planners in development has attracted the affect is one area that can be effective in economic and social development in rural areas, half of Sistan well about the nature exception of it's kind in the country is considered as one of the regions beautiful, excellent and fascinating country is East. Half of the wells, natural ponds are 50 kilometers Zabol, Helmand River by channeling excess water to be driven. In most years, the water supply in the rural agricultural boom of the plain area. Well the most important part of the impacts of the activities can be focused on economic growth and rural development and reduce the lack of employment opportunities in different parts of the agricultural, industrial and be. We aimed in this direction, set clear indicators of economic and social well in Sistan and the undeniable importance of rural development in the economical and social well in half or more. The study sample because of the large size of the villages in this region, which includes 18 villages, four villages, and well half the number of households, is 2071. The village has a population of 8280 people in the sample population to respond to the questionnaire, 150 Cochran formula council officials, Rural administrators (governor of a rural district); forms. This study combines the methods of descriptive, analytical and based on library research, documentation and field is. In this regard, research data library methods (use of historical sources and documents) and the review and development of the field and prepared using the questionnaire collected data will be reviewed. And data analysis software SPSS, GIS and AHP are used.

Key words: rural development, economic and social impacts, Sistan, Chah nime